

Online Resources

Websites you can visit to learn more about Co-Living and Intentional Communities

delvalcoco.org

Conscious Co-Living

www.consciouscoliving.com

FOUNDATION FOR INTENTIONAL
COMMUNITY

www.ic.org

GLOBAL ECOVILLAGE
NETWORK

ecovillage.org cohousing

www.cohousing.org

How You Can Get Involved

We invite you to join with us in reaching out to more and more people as we expand our network.

- Sign up for our newsletter:
<http://delvalcoco.org/newsletter>
- Our Facebook group:
<facebook.com/delvalcoco>
- Last Sunday of the month on-line public meeting and discussion:
<delvalcoco.org/conferences>
- Speakers Bureau: Ask us for a speaker to make a presentation to your group:
contact@delvalcoco.org
- Look for our table at local events
- Call us: (484) 367-5823

We welcome your questions and suggestions.

Connecting People, Cultivating Community

*To go fast, go alone,
To go far, go together
African proverb*

Co-living is a way of sharing our lives. It's about the places where we live, but it's also about how we live. It's an option more and more people are considering for several reasons.

It's a way of making housing more affordable, but it's also a way of addressing social isolation, which is a byproduct of living in a highly mobile society.

Many people are looking for connection, and co-living provides the opportunity to interact with others who are also looking for a deeper sense of community. It can give us the kind of emotional support that's lacking in our largely "go-it-alone" society, providing a kind of safety net where we can help each other face life's challenges.

Delaware Valley Co-living Cooperative is an organization focused on helping people find and/or build their communities, connecting individuals and families throughout Southeast Pennsylvania, South New Jersey, Northern Delaware and Northeast Maryland.

DVCC is a worker directed non-profit, committed to providing affordable housing within the framework of an intentional, interactive community through the acquisition of properties and the establishment of land trusts, with a focus on the conversion of multi-dwelling units into co-living co-operatives, funded through foundations, social impact bonds and local municipal grants, donation or cooperative purchase.

We are open to partnering with other organizations with similar or complementary goals. DVCC is also committed to incorporating environmentally sound building techniques in the renovation projects with which we are involved.

Along with this we aim to support and utilize elements of cooperativism including but not limited to cooperatively run health and wellness plans, food and consumer product co-ops, community gardens and cooperatively run credit unions.

"Co-living is all about community, but it also supports individuality. It's about sharing rather than consumption, and collaboration rather than competition."

-- coliving.com

